“This forward-thinking development is breaking away from the traditional [retail] model by creating a cultural epicenter that brings local and international cuisine, retail, art, music and innovation to our Theatre District”

The Honorable Sylvester Turner,
Mayor of Houston.

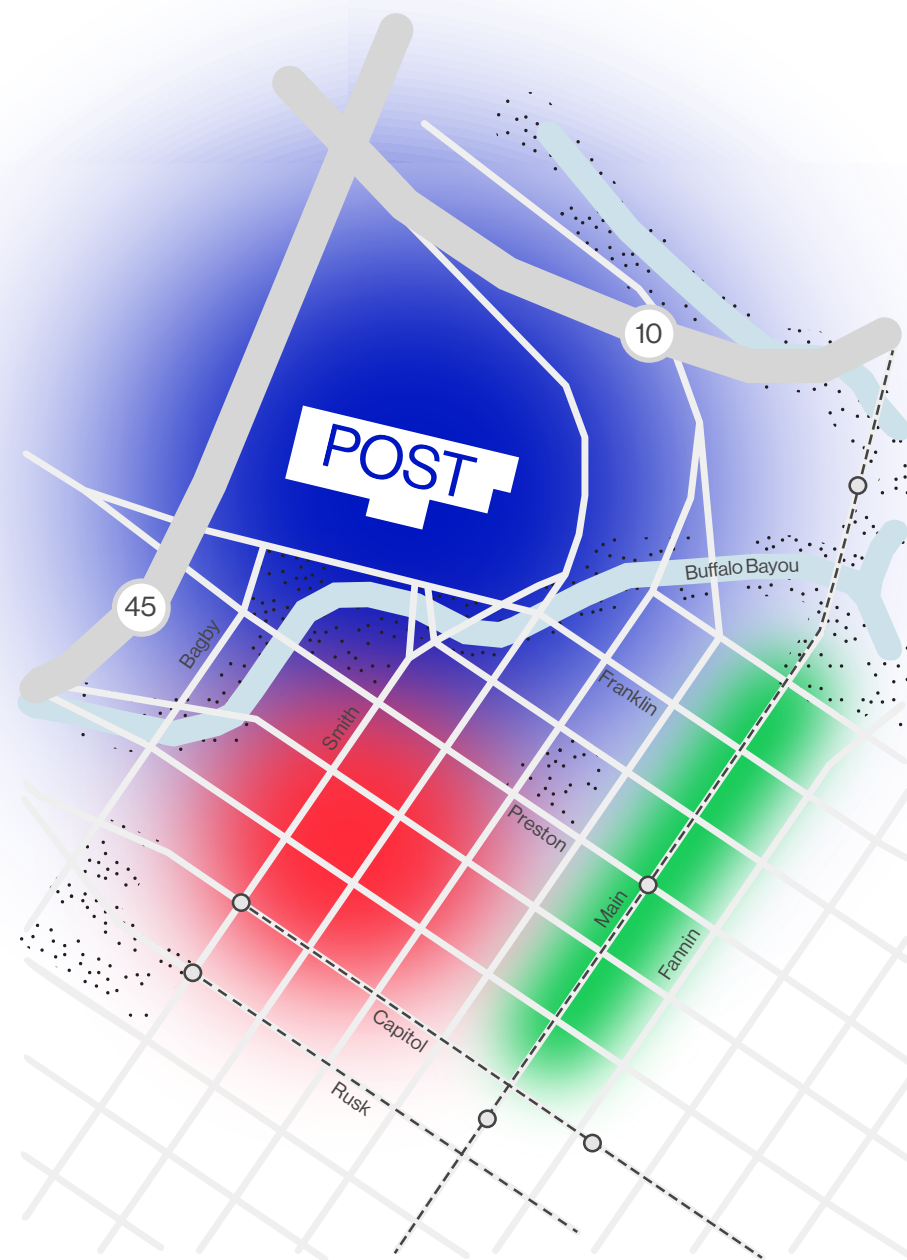

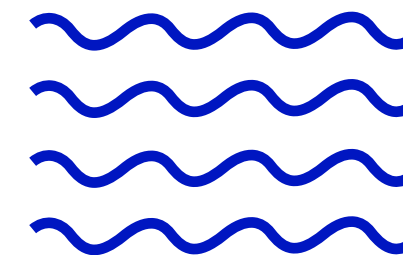

Built in 1934, POST was first established at the city's gateway for travelers and freight, serving as Houston's Grand Central Station. Upon being purchased by the US Government in the late 1950's, the building was repurposed as the main post office for the city of Houston.

The post office was opened in 1962, and named for Barbara Jordan, the South's first female African American legislator elected to the US Congress.

In 2015, the US Government decommissioned the Barbara Jordan Post Office and sold the building to Lovett Commercial. Our project, POST aims to reinvigorate the city's Theatre District with an adaptive reuse cultural epicenter linking past and future.

Urban Explorers Welcome

Life around POST is anything but typical. Look up and discover soaring skyscrapers or look down to take in the natural beauty of Buffalo Bayou Park. Turn a corner and uncover a piece Houston's historic past or contemporary public art. Discover world-class theaters, funky hotspots, movies in the park, and find yourself in the new Houston.

Site Plan

Designed by the Office of Metropolitan Architecture, POST will be anchored around three distinct districts - the X, the O and the Z atriums. These three atriums, excavated from the existing structural grid, will bring light into the depth of the building. Each atrium will be covered with an ETFE roof system (the first in Houston) and defined by unique monumental staircases linking the different layers of the building, culminating in an expansive 210,000 sft. rooftop park and farm.

The atrium's flexible program will serve as unique backdrops for a variety of events

As the country's most culturally diverse city with a rapidly growing food scene, Houston has emerged as one of the country's top foodie destinations. POST hosts the city's largest market hall featuring over 40,000 sft. of culinary options.

01

Market-style vendors showcasing local tastes and styles

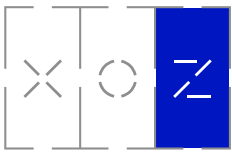

02

Wide selection of international cuisine featuring award winning chefs

The market hall offers prospective tenants a variety of flexible leasing options. From food stalls as small as 200 sft., to seated restaurants as large as 1,600 sft., tenants will find themselves as part of a curated group that pioneers new culinary ground.

Architecturally optimized for informal collaboration, the Z Stair anchors POST's co-working atrium and office offerings. With options ranging from single desk rentals to larger corporate leases, POST is able to accommodate organizations and businesses of all scales.

Centrally located on Level 2, shared spaces, private offices, and flexible suites by Common Desk are now open, offering

01

Get involved with the community and build your business together

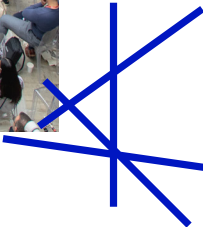

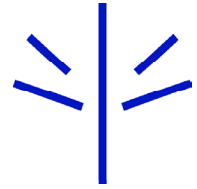

02

Open lounge areas create comfortable working spaces

Work in a creative environment that takes advantage of the invaluable sense of community

Enjoy an evening out on the world's largest rooftop park and farm where everyone has front row seats of the skyline

01

Enjoy outdoor activities with family and friends

02

Grab a seat on the skylawn and enjoy front row seats to the city

Skylawn, the expansive five-acre rooftop park and sustainable organic farm designed by Hoerr Schaudt, provides 360 degree, unobstructed views of the city's downtown skyline and will include multiple dining and event venues. The property's culinary tenants will be able to source ingredients from the rooftop farm, allowing them to offer a rooftop-to-table experience.
